The Commiſſioners Plenipotentiaries were lodged at Court, and had Guards placed at their reſpective Apartments.

On Saturday the 23d Inſtant, the Day appointed for beginning the Ceremony, the Commiſſioners Plenipotentiaries were conducted thro' the Great Hall to an Audience of his Highneſs. The Gentleman in Waiting opening the Doors, the Commiſſioners Plenipotentiaries entred: The King of Arms having delivered the Letter of Credence and the Book of the Statutes of the Order to Sir Charles Hanbury Williams, the latter preſented them to the Margrave. In the Evening his Highneſs gave an Inſtrument under his Hand and Seal, whereby he promiſed to obſerve every Article, not contrary to the Religion profeſſed by him, or derogatory to any Rights or Privileges of the Holy Roman Empire, or to the Order of the Black Eagle, of which he is already a Knight Companion: After which the Commiſſioners Plenipotentiaries taking the Garter (richly ſet with Brilliants) from a Silver Table, whereon it was placed, buckled it upon the Margrave's Left Leg, the King of Arms reading the Admonition in Latin.

Then they took the Blue Ribbon from the ſame Silver Table, and placed it over the Left Shoulder of his Highneſs, bringing it athwart under the Right Arm, with the Diamond George, the King of Arms reading the Admonition.

The Margrave dined in Publick in the Great Hall, Sir Charles Hanbury Williams being ſeated next to his Highneſs, and the King of Arms next to her Royal Highneſs the Margravine.

On Sunday the 24th Inſtant, the Day of Inveſtiture, Sir Charles Hanbury Williams, and the King of Arms habited in his Mantle, with the other Enſigns of his Office, were conducted and introduced in the ſame Manner. The following Enſigns of the Order, viz. the Commiſſion of the Sovereign, the Surcoat, Sword, Mantle, Hood, Great Collar, Book of Statutes, and the Cap and Feathers, were laid on a Crimſon Velvet Cuſhion, laced with Gold, upon a Silver Table.

The Commiſſioners Plenipotentiaries firſt took off the Margrave's upper Garment, and his Highneſs taking off his Sword, which was of Gold, gave it to the King of Arms as his accuſtomed Fee, who wore it during the whole Ceremony. Then they put the Surcoat upon his Highneſs, and the Sword of the Order. Immediately after, her Royal Highneſs the Margravine was led by the firſt Miniſter Baron Seckendorff through the Range of Chambers, into that where the Inveſtiture was to be performed, preceeded by her Great Chamberlain, and followed by the Ladies of the Court.

All the Miniſters, Privy Councellors and Gentlemen followed: M. Reizenſtein carried the Hood upon a Cuſhion; Major General M. de Kronegk the Book of Statutes; Major General de Polniz the Great Collar; the Great Maſter of the Horſe, M. de Polniz, the Cap and Feathers richly adorned with Diamonds and precious Stones; then followed the King of Arms, carrying upon a Crimſon Velvet Cuſhion, fringed and laced with Gold, the Sovereign's Commiſſion and the Mantle of the Order.

Sir Charles Hanbury Williams, Knight of the moſt Honourable Order of the Bath.

Immediately upon their Entry into the Salon, the Privy Councellors, Officers and Gentlemen of his Highneſs, thus preceding by Pairs, made three Obeiſſances jointly towards the Stall of the Sovereign, and repeated the ſame in the Middle, and at the Places appointed for them.

The Stall erected for the Sovereign, with a Canopy, was of Crimſon Velvet richly laced with Gold; in which Stall, above the Chair, were the Arms of England, empaled with St. George's Croſs.

His Highneſs the Margrave having alſo made the like Reverences, aſcended into his Stall, which was of Crimſon Sattin, with a Canopy laced with Gold; and the Arms of the moſt Serene Houſe of Brandenbourg-Anſpach were above the Chair; where ſeating himſelf, the Commiſſioners Plenipotentiaries

Plenipotentiaries did the like in the reſpective Chairs.

The Muſick played for ſome Time, and when it ceaſed, Sir Charles Hanbury Williams roſe up, and making an Obedience to the Sovereign's Stall and to the Margrave, made a Speech in French, ſetting forth the Antiquity and Dignity of this moſt Noble Order; in Anſwer to which, Baron de Seckendorff, Principal Secretary of State, made a Speech in the ſame Language.

Which being ended, the King of Arms delivered the Commiſſion to Sir Charles, who preſented it to the Margrave, and his Highneſs gave it to his private Secretary to be read aloud, during which Time all Perſons ſtood up: The Secretary having read it, returned it to his Highneſs, who gave it to the King of Arms, to be preſerved amongſt the Archives of the Order.

The Muſick then played for ſome Time, during which his Highneſs repoſed himſelf in his Stall, and the Commiſſioners Plenipotentiaries ſat down in their Chairs.

After which the King of Arms roſe up, and making an Obedience to the Sovereign's Stall, and then to his Highneſs, took from the Table, whereon the Enſigns of the Order were laid, the Mantle, and giving it to Sir Charles, they jointly inveſted his Highneſs therewith, the King of Arms reading the Admonition in Latin.

In the ſame Manner the Hood was deliver'd, and fixed upon the Right Shoulder of his Highneſs.

The Collar was put on in like Manner, the King of Arms reading the Admonition in Latin.

Then Sir Charles deliver'd to his Highneſs the Book of Statutes.

Laſtly the Commiſſioners Plenipotentiaries placed the Cap and Feathers on his Highneſs's Head, and then made a Reverence to the Stall of the Sovereign.

After a ſhort Repoſe the King of Arms ſtood up, and making his Obedience to the Stall of the Sovereign, and alſo to the Margrave, proclaimed in Latin, the Styles of the Sovereign, and of his moſt Serene Highneſs.

The Proclamation of the Styles being made, the Trumpets ſounded and Kettle Drums beat, and a general Diſcharge of the Cannon was made.

The Proceſſion returned in the like Manner, four Gentlemen bearing the Train of the Margrave's Mantle.

When the Deſert was put upon the Table, his Highneſs took off his Cap, and drank Health, firſt the King of Great Britain, Sovereign of the moſt Noble Order of the Garter; then to their Royal Highneſſes the Prince and Princeſs of Wales, and all the Royal Family; and laſtly to the Knights Companions of the moſt Noble Order of the Garter.

Sir Charles Hanbury Williams drank Proſperity to the Houſe of Brandenbourg-Anſpach, and the Healths of the Emperor and Empreſs Queen.
